1 Aboriginal inmate access to traditional foods

1.1 Policy

In NSW traditional foods may be available only seasonally and in areas where they are native to Country. It therefore may be necessary to provide a substitute food to ensure traditional food is available for an approved cultural event or Aboriginal specific program.

The traditional foods of NSW are often referred to as 'Bush Tucker' and may include kangaroo, emu, fish, some native plants, jams, fruits, vegetables and nuts. Traditional foods that are not native to NSW are not to be considered for consumption at cultural events in NSW correctional centres.

To ensure CSNSW complies with legislation protecting flora and fauna, traditional foods that are available in NSW and native to Country generally should be purchased from a licensed retail outlet in NSW. Any other methods of acquiring native foods must have the approval of the Governor of the correctional centre.

1.2 Purchasing traditional foods

The Traditional Foods Purchase Order form is to be used to order traditional foods.

Traditional foods must be purchased from a licensed retail outlet, or butcher shop that sells 'bush tucker'.

The following foods cannot be purchased or provided at an approved cultural event or Aboriginal specific program:

- game meats that are not traditional foods or native to Country or which are restricted by legislation
- traditional plant foods that are not native fruits, vegetables, nuts, berries or jams made from native fruits
- prawns, oysters and crabs.

1.3 Food from outside parties

The Governor or delegated officer may give prior approval, in consultation with the Regional Aboriginal Programs Officer (RAPO), to a proposal for traditional food to be brought into a correctional centre by outside parties for significant cultural events or Aboriginal specific programs. Such proposals from outside parties will only be considered where traditional foods are unable to be sourced from a licenced retail outlet and/or butcher.
